KENTUCKY'S QUEEN.

Her Beauty Shown Forth By a Splendid Poem in the Form of Prose.

Winchester Democrat,

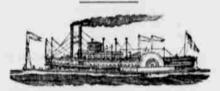

We have read of Maud on a summer day, who raked, barefoot, the new-mown hav: we have read of the maid in the early morn who milked the cow with the crumpled horn, and we've read the lay that poets sing of the rustling corn and the flowers of spring; but of all the lays of the tongue or pen, there's naught like the lay of the Kentucky hep. Long, long before Maud makes her hav the Kentucky hen begins to iny, and ere the milkmaid has stirred a peg, the hep is up and has dropped her egg: the corn must rustle and the flowers spring, if they keep up with the barnyard ring. If Maud is needing a hat or gown, she doesn't take her hay to town; she goes to the store and obtains her suit with a basket full of fresh hen fruit. If the milkmaid's beau makes Saturday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock the Nomad all, but works up eggs in a custard pie, and stuffs him full of chicken fry. And when the old man wants a horn, does he take the druggist a load of corn? Not much. He simply robs a nest, to town he goes-you know the rest. He lingers and he talks, perchance, of good wife stays at home and scowis, but is saved from want by those self same fowls; for while the husband lingers there, she watches the cackling hen with care, and gathers the eggs, the eggs she'll hide, till she gets enough to stem the tide. Then bail, all bail the Kentucky hen, the greatest blessing of all to men. Throw up your bat and make Rome howl for the persevering barnyard fowl. Corn may be
